FOR RACE AND NATION

YES, WE TOO BELIEVE IN THE RIGHT TO WORK

IN THE WAKE of the massive unemployment problem created by the present Government and its predecessors, we are now hearing much talk from Government ministers of the need for 'self help' and 'self reliance' to create work where work has been lost. Mrs. Thatcher, who has led this chorus, has laid great stress on the value of the enterprising individual who, living in an area whose basic industries have been crippled by the depression, has used his own personal initiative to go out and find employment for himself by starting up in business on his own account, perhaps as a window-cleaner, perhaps as odd job man, perhaps as painter and decorator. What he has done, the Thatcherites proclaim, others can do too. He is the hero and ideal of the current Tory economic theology, and he is contrasted starkly with the thousands of others who, according to Thatcher and Co., sit on their butts and wait for the State to take care of them.

DANGEROUS

It is an alluring concept – and dangerous, like all others which contain perhaps a 20 per-cent element of truth. Of course the individuals who rouse themselves to go out and create work for themselves in a situation of mass unemployment are to be praised. Of course they are among the most valued members of society.

But to project and plan national economic recovery on the basis of the idea that every working man should, and can, take that sort of action is to live in cloud-cuckooland. There is always going to be a limit on the amount of work available to self-employed window-cleaners, odd job men, painters and decorators and other similar types of tradesmen in any locality, even the most prosperous, and that limit is going to be even more strict in localities where many thousands are jobless, dependent on unemployment and social security benefits and therefore forced to cut down expenditure on all but the most essential items.

Tory 'self-help' philosophy is no substitute for national industrial revival

NEED TO KEEP INDUSTRIES GOING

Where large population centres have grown up through the existence of substantial industries employing many thousands of people, there simply is no substitute for keeping those industries going, or – where that is impractical because of changing times – bringing new industries to those areas to take their place. Whatever praises may be sung in support of the few lone individuals who seize the initiative to create their own work, the fact must be faced that the vast majority in any population require to have work created for them. When that work is made available and they decline to take it, then it may be fair to dismiss them as lazy, indolent and lacking the spirit of 'get up and go'. But as long as the work does not exist a government which takes such a contemptuous attitude towards millions of its fellow countrymen is sowing the seeds of a national and social divisiveness from which it will in time reap a bitter harvest.

The 'right to work' is a term which the political left has almost made its own property, and for that reason it is unpopular with most of those who would call themselves 'conservatives'. More's the pity, for in fact the right to work is a perfectly reasonable and valid principle which should be recognised by all people, regardless of their political colouring. We would agree that leftists and liberals are to be found whining much too often about everybody's 'rights', and we would repudiate the idea that anyone – apart from the very young, very old, sick and disabled – have any rights at all that are not balanced by duties and responsibilities. But the right to do a useful job of work is one that comes into a special category of its own; it may be said that the very act of doing it fulfills the duty and responsibility by which it is earned. Where there are millions of people ready and willing to perform that duty and responsibility but are not granted the right to have the facilities available to perform them – and cannot be expected, except in very few cases, to provide those facilities themselves, there are the seeds of massive alienation, bitterness and strife. The political left thrives on these seeds; the Tories, to their eternal shame, persist in going on sowing them.

We Nationalists, repudiating as we do the labels of the 'left' and 'right', recognise an obligation to every one of our fellow countrymen to provide him with the opportunity to work where he is willing to work. We also recognise an obligation to the nation as a whole to create an economic climate free of the bitter divisions into 'two nations' that are the legacy of successive governments' failures to keep Britain working.

A lot is made by the Tories of the need for British industries to become 'competitive'. We accept this need just as the Tories do. But a nation cannot be competitive which keeps 3 million of its able-bodied people in idleness and has to fork out vast sums of public money to support them in that idleness. First, work must be organised in British factories for British workers to do, THEN every effort must be made to improve the performance of that work and the competitiveness of its products. The horse must be put before the cart, and not vice versa.

CAPITULATION

BEFORE THE LAST ELECTION the Tories made a great song and dance about the evils of the political levy system in trade unions, whereby a part of union members' contributions were donated to the Labour Party unless they requested otherwise. Under the system union members were assumed to consent to this arrangement unless they 'contracted out' of it. A far more just system would of course be one based on the reverse principle, that of 'contracting in', whereby members' dues would not be allocated to Labour funds unless they requested that they should be. This was the system supported by the vast majority who voted Conservative in June 1983.

In their election manifesto, however, the Tories took care not to commit themselves too far. "We intend," the manifesto said, "to invite the TUC to discuss the steps which the trade unions themselves can take to ensure that individual members are freely and effectively able to decide for themselves whether or not to pay the political levy. In the event that the trade unions are not willing to take such steps, the Government will be prepared to introduce measures to guarantee the free and effective right of choice."

This was in fact not a pledge to do anything, for the right of trade union members to decide for themselves whether to pay the levy already existed: a right they could exercise by the act of 'contracting out' of the obligation. In practice this right was not exercised by any more than a small number. The vast majority of trade union members are politically apathetic, and simply cannot be bothered to go through the procedure of having their contributions to the levy withdrawn. Labour of course depends on this apathy; if the rule were reversed and members had to go through a procedure to 'contract in' to pay the levy, that apathy would work against Labour, for equally few would bother to do so, and Labour would be catastrophically short of funds. No wonder Labour and the TUC bitterly opposed the proposition that the 'contracting in' system be adopted!

In the event the Tory Government has done nothing just as its manifesto indicated it would do. All it has wrung out of the TUC is a pledge that it would do more than in the past to provide information to members on how to 'contract out' when they requested it. The difference that that will make to the actual numbers of members who withdraw from paying the levy will be minimal. The apathy of the great mass of members will remain the deciding factor. Labour will continue to derive huge contributions from millions who are not its supporters.

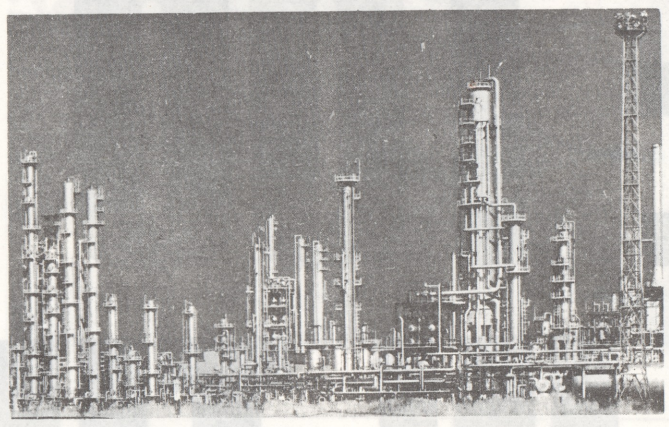
'Boat People' refuse to work

LEN BEARSFORD WALKER REPORTS

THEY CAME begging for sanctuary in leaky, overcrowded boats and our Government, without asking us, admitted them. They were housed on an unused RAF camp and provided with clothing, bedding and furniture and generous Social Security payments. These pitiful refugees were so unused to clean bedding they used it until it was so soiled it had to be burned – in the furnace beside the launderette they could not be bothered to use. Probably because it was free, their pride made them unable to accept this excess charity.

The final insult came when local businessmen, naive enough to believe it was a kindness, offered to employ many of them. The answer – coldly disdainful: "We did not come here to work!" And why should they? They receive more in Social Security benefit payments than most of our decent, hard-working men and women receive for a week's honest toil – a great part of which is forcibly taken from them in taxes from which the work-shy boat people derive largesse.

When will our people wake up?



Government allows multi-nationals to wreck British chemical industry

Commentary by MICHAEL EASTER

BRITAIN'S SECOND LARGEST UNION, the giant General, Municipal, Boilermakers and Allied Trades Union (GMBATU) appears at long last to be waking up to the appalling damage being done to the UK Chemical Industry by the EEC, International Financiers and the Tory Government.

David Warburton, the Union's "National Industrial Officer", in a recent article in the magazine Chemistry and Industry, said that the forecast decline of the Chemical Industry in the UK by the Government's own Economic Development Committee makes grim reading for any trade union with a major part of its membership in that Industry.

Mr. Warburton went on to say that, even viewed in the most optimistic tones, there are likely to be 20,000 fewer jobs in the industry by 1992. He gave as one of the principal reasons the fact that multinational companies were closing three times as many factories in the UK as they were in France and Germany. Mr. Warburton does not believe that the French or Germans will allow their own industries to close and consequently sees the UK becoming totally dependent on foreign-produced basic chemicals. The Tory government and the International Financiers are quite willing to allow this situation to develop and there is no doubt that the UK Chemical Industry is closing down. To use Mr. Warburton's own words, "the UK Chemical Industry (is) following the UK car industry into 'specialised insignificance' ".

He concludes his article by saying: " . . . but the day of 'Big Brother' is already here in the form of corporation interests, which are given priority over that of the workforce, the community and even the overall national interest".

It is significant that in the same month ICI, the UK's largest chemical company, announced that it would build a plant in Saudi Arabia, which the unions had expected to be built in the North East of England. ICI also said that it was negotiating to sell a plant to the USSR.

We applaud the GMBATU and Mr. Warburton for exposing the sordid sell out of our National interests for the profit of the International few.

It is BNP policy to encourage unions to represent their members in an articulate and sensible manner. We agree with Mr. Warburton that a major part oof the goods sold in British shops, should be made by British workers in British factories (we call this Economic Nationalism). Further, we believe that discussions between all in industry and the Government should be aimed at the overall national interest, an interest which includes the well-being of the British workforce and the strategic strength of our nation (we call this idea Social Nationalism).

ROYAL RUBBISH

WHILE OUR PAPER supports the Monarchy, our dislike of Prince Charles increases. Recently the Prince made a visit to South London during which he condemned young thugs who make attacks on old people.

This is pure humbug. As Prince Charles knows very well, the vast majority of those young thugs are black and their victims white. These are not OUR facts; they are facts supplied by Scotland Yard.

And yet Prince Charles, with his constant slobbering over the black community, has done more to promote multi-racialism in Britain than perhaps any other person, and it is the multi-racial experiment that above all has resulted in the danger to old folk that he claims concerns him.

Multi-racialists like Prince Charles are, if anything, the chief culprits for the unsafe situation on Britain's streets which has resulted in so many helpless old folk suffering appalling injuries.

Charles spoke more rubbish when he blamed unemployment for the attacks. The areas of highest unemployment are NOT the areas where such attacks are the most widespread, as he well knows.

The future

Alien saturation,
Nil repatriation,
MP's adoration
Of all things black and Asian,
White Man's relegation,
Dark Man's elevation –
But show no indignation
Or risk incarceration!
MPs in elation
At their new found station,
Bought with gold persuasion
To their moral degradation
By the giant corporation
That is strangling the nation,
With no valid explanation,
There is only expectation
Of VIOLENT CONFRONTATION!

KEN LIVINGSTONE'S MADHOUSE

FOR A LONG TIME NOW we Nationalists have declared that the Greater London Council, apart from its fawning love of Blacks, queers and the IRA, is a shameful waste of public money.

However, there is one thing for which we should be grateful to the GLC. It highlights the stupidity that is rampant in the political world today. This was never better illustrated than at a recent meeting of the London Transport Passenger Committee of the Council. At the meeting the term 'traffic black spot' was being bandied about when one of the committee members leapt to his feet in horror and asked the chairman to remove all racist remarks like 'black spot' from the discussions. It appears that following his outburst everyone present sat in embarrassed silence until only laughter from a black committee member eased the situation.

So now we know what is expected of us. At the very mention of the word 'black' we must touch our caps, just as we must divert our eyes and shuffle our feet at the mention of the word 'Jew'. We must look to our black or Jewish neighbours to see if it is in order to laugh at certain remarks – or whether we should remain in guilty silence.

The spirit of the British nation, with notable exceptions, has sunk pitifully low. But at least we know our position, thanks to the GLC!

CATALOGUE OF BLACK CRIMES CONTINUES

More savage attacks in first weeks of 1984

MORE HORRIFYING black crimes have been committed during the first few weeks of 1984, adding to the revolting catalogue of those recorded during the previous year. In their bestial nature these crimes far exceed anything to which we have been accustomed in this country, even from our worst types of home-grown thugs.

BABY NICOLA WITH HER MOTHER
Black thugs punched and slashed her – see cut on cheek

ATTACK ON CHILD

Last October Mrs. Sally Meynhart, a 26-year-old housewife and mother, was mugged by a gang of black youths as she was walking with her 21-month-old daughter Nicola in Streatham, South London. The young Blacks threatened to slash little Nicola with a razor if the mother did not hand over her money and jewellery. Mrs. Meynhart gave them the items demanded and they fled. An occurrence of a type so common these days that it scarcely gets reported.

But the Blacks were not finished with Mrs. Meynhart and her child. They assumed that she had reported the incident to the police and feared that she would bear witness against them if they were caught. On February 8th of this year Mrs. Meynhart was again walking with Nicola through Streatham when a car drew up beside them containing four black youths. One got out whom she immediately recognised as one of the attackers in the previous incident. Referring to that incident, he shouted "drop these allegations." Before she had a chance to say anything, he then drew out his razor again and this time slashed little Nicola across the cheek then punched her in the face.

Mrs. Meynhart tried to intervene but was stabbed in the thigh. The youth then got back into the car and fled, telling Mrs. Meynhart not to report the matter to the police.

STABBED 22 TIMES

Retired boilerman Robert Tally, known as 'Old Bobby' to his friends, was walking home from a working man's club in South London when two black youths attacked him. Though 84 years old and only 5 ft 4 in, Bobby tried to fight the two Blacks off. They then set about him and stabbed him in the back and stomach 22 times, leaving him in a pool of blood just a few yards from his door. He was taken to hospital where he somehow survived.

This was the second time in only three weeks that Mr. Tally had been mugged. In the first attack his wallet was snatched. On that occasion also the attackers were young Blacks.

Old Bobby's neighbours were aghast at the stabbing. Said one: "It's a dreadful thing to have happened to such a dear, sweet little old man. He would never hurt a fly. He was always so gentle, kind and polite."

TERRIFYING ASSAULT

Roger and Veronica Torode are landlord and landlady of the Railway Telegraph pub in Forest Hill, again in South London. On a night in January two Blacks armed with machetes carried out a terrifying attack on the pub, fighting a bloody battle with the Torodes after breaking in. Although they wore masks Mr. Torode managed to unmask them in the course of the fight, revealing their racial identities.

Roger Torode needed over 50 stitches after the incident, and his wife suffered a six-inch gash to her forehead. An identikit picture of one of the attackers is shown on this page.

These are just three random examples of crimes of a type entirely alien to this country, from which millions of British people, young and old, now live in constant fear.

ROBERT TALLY (84)
Chest shows vicious stab wounds

A reign of terror has come to the streets of certain parts of Britain, the inner city areas of London, Birmingham and Liverpool where the old homogeneity and 'togetherness' of communities has totally broken down. Especially vulnerable, it would seem, are the elderly like Robert Tally and mothers with tiny tots like Sally Meynhart.

This reign of terror is the legacy that has been created in our country by the politicians who have enthusiastically promoted the multi-racial experiment and then showed blindness in the face of all the evidence that it doesn't work.

These politicians are the greatest criminals of all.

ANTI-RACIST YEAR '84 SHOULD OPEN DOORS

'ANTI-RACISM'
The front page headline

REPRODUCED HERE is a headline from the front page of Spectrum, produced by the Lewisham Council for Community Relations and devoted to 'fighting racism'. The headline and following lead article herald the 'Anti-Racist Year' currently being promoted by the GLC and the article is full of approving comments on the project.

ALL-BLACK

Then on the back page of the same paper there is a photograph of a 'street hockey' team representing the Lewisham Youth Club, which we also reproduce here. Readers will be interested to see that the whole team is black! Surely that is 'racism' if anything is. Why no white players? Has the Lewisham Council for Community Relations made an investigation of the Club to see if it is operating a discriminatory policy in the selection of its sports teams? We can bet it has not! Racism, you see, is only wrong when it is practised by Whites against Blacks; it is never wrong when it is practised by Blacks against Whites.

If the South Africans pick an all-white cricket or rugger team, there is hell to pay all over the world, and the opponents of 'racism' are demanding that everyone operate a boycott against the South Africans. But if Lewisham Youth Club – and after all Lewisham is part of Britain! – picks an all-black street hockey team, the team's doings are glowingly reported by the LCCR in its paper.

Can we not be forgiven for believing that 'Anti-Racism' is nothing more than a conspiracy against the White Man?

Keep Nissan out of Britain!

says KEN USHER

JUST WHAT does the Government think it's doing allowing the Japanese car giant Nissan to build a factory in this country? The factory will only employ around 500 British people, assembling 'car kits'. Not content with massive car imports from Japan already, the Government is allowing Nissan special grants to help them set their factory up. At the end of the day, it is said, the factory will be making 200,000 cars a year. A large part of that total will be sold here in Britain – at the expense of our own British motor manufacturers.

The prime mover behind the scheme is Norman (Get on your bike!) Tebbit, who has attempted to justify the deal by saying that by 1991 it could lead to the creation of some 6,000 new jobs in this country.

LOSS OF BRITISH JOBS

But what about the number of workers in British motor factories who would certainly lose their jobs as a result of this new intrusion into the British market? Most probably they would be far in excess of 6,000.

The Nissan deal is yet another example of so-called 'internationalist' ideals in action – ideals which show very little concern for the British worker, whose prospects of employment have already suffered enough through international trade.

It would be far better if the money given out in grants to Nissan were to be put into backing British Leyland, now the only large-scale motor manufacturer in this country that is British-owned. As the achievements of the new Leyland Metro plant have shown, our own car workers, once they are provided with the proper up-to-date automated equipment, can outproduce the rest of Europe. Making the rest of the British motor industry as modern as the Metro plant is what the Government should be spending money on – not helping the Japs to add to their already excessive conquest of the British market.

Sir,–The attitude of Jews in Israel towards Chancellor Kohl of West Germany on the occasion of his recent visit to their country did not come as any great surprise to me. The German Chancellor never was a member of the Nazi Party (he was too young) but his only crime seems to be that he is a German – he is being blamed for what he is and not for what he has done.

Surely this is a 'racist' attitude.

Sir,–The Queen's Christmas broadcast seems to have been specifically designed to alienate her most loyal subjects.

Sir,–I notice frequently that goods on sale bearing the Union Jack are marked 'Made in England', whereas the appropriate marking, bearing in mind the use of the national flag, should be 'Made in Britain'.

I am pleased that the British National Party does not support this, as I believe it to be nationally divisive.

DAVID ELLIS,

Sir,–Recently I observed a young man walking down the street wearing a pair of earphones round his head, with the earphones attached by wire to an instrument he was carrying in his hand.

My first thought was to be sorry for him, as it occurred to me that he must be chronically deaf and this was his only means of hearing.

As he drew closer, I realised the reason for all this cumbersome apparatus. He was merely carrying a transistor radio, which was playing the most excruciating 'pop' music, and the earphones were to enable him to hear the music at top volume.

It seems to me that this kind of music has become a drug, which some people have to have dinning into their ears every moment of their waking lives. What a commentary on our times!

Liverpool reds go frantic over BNP

THE FAR LEFT in Liverpool has been much in the news lately as a result of the antics of the red-dominated city council confronting the government over its rate support grant. There is in fact today only one organised political force in the Merseyside area dedicated to fighting the red poison and that is the Liverpool branch of the British National Party.

Indeed the impact made by the BNP in Liverpool has so enraged the local reds that the latter have singled out the BNP for 'special treatment'. A motion was passed at a Young Socialists conference at Blackpool recently to the effect that the BNP must be eliminated from the streets of Liverpool. To this purpose large left-wing gangs have recently been turning up regularly at the BNP paper sales pitch in the city centre and attempting to intimidate the Nationalists, so far without success. The hand of the far left local council could be seen in this by the fact that the notorious councillor Derek Hatton has been observed skulking around in the background, although never having the courage to face the Nationalists openly. This the reds have preferred to do by means of their womenfolk, who have been baying anti-Nationalist slogans in order, no doubt it is hoped, to bait the BNP lads into assaulting them – a typical left-wing trick. The Nationalists, however, have refused to get drawn and have contented themselves with occasional verbal counter-attacks that have cut the red harridans down to size.

Recently the reds did manage to persuade the police to order the Nationalists to remove their Union Jack flag on the grounds that it was 'provocative' but this has not affected paper sales, which continue to maintain a high level. Our picture here shows BNP and left-wing paper sellers together on the same precinct. We are informed that British Nationalist regularly outsells the reds' paper Militant – despite the attempts of the left-wingers to intimidate would-be BN customers.

LONDON SOCIAL GREAT SUCCESS

THE LONDON SOCIAL staged by the British National Party on the 2nd March was by common consent by far the best event of its kind ever.

A convivial atmosphere was maintained by the presence of Archie Wilson and his four-piece band, which played popular melodies for singing and dancing refreshingly free of the degenerate and alien influences in the music played at some Nationalist social functions. Thrown in also were a comedian and some competitions, together with plenty of good food (laid on by Sylvia May) and drink, and a good time was had by all.

About 120 attended – a fair number considering they were almost exclusively from London and nearby and had to pay £5 a head. When the word gets round, however, of what a good social it was we expect a better attendance at the next social event, which is scheduled for late Spring. It is also hoped to obtain a more central location which will be more convenient to those coming from South of the Thames.

Congratulations must go to Robin May, who undertook responsibility for organising and promoting the social, which he did supremely well.

The strongest argument that the TUC could muster in favour of retaining the present iniquitous system was that without it the Labour Party would most probably go bankrupt.

The best possible reason, the politically innocent may say, for a Tory Government doing away with the system. So why has this Tory Government not done just that? The fact that it has not strengthens the case of those who say that the politicians and parties of Westminster are all in cahoots together – behind their attacks on one another in public, in private they all belong to the same club!
